The Mother Touch

How soon the house shows its absence! How little the lack of a mother's executive watchfulness is realized till, like her plants that droop for want of water—overlooking about the house has somehow a wilted look! For was it not "mother" who moved about, instinctively placing a right-colored vase just where the light would most effectively fall on it, and raised a curtain, or drew it aside, from the same artistic impulse? Who opened a window here, or closed it there, just at the right moment to make the temperature of the house agreeable? Who, passing into one room, straightened cloth that was ever so little awry upon the table, or put out of the way some carelessly placed footstool, or chair?

It was not "mother" who, seating herself at the table, saw on the instant if the proper positions of the dishes were respected? And did she not, how weary, tell her futtering little of detail, and to add that the unfries were unanimously preserved in spite of Erin's unteachable proclivities. To the contrary, and all with a glance of her eye, or a whispered word, or a touch of her magic finger-tips? And the children? The button is never missing at the throat of the little garment where

And who but "mother" remembers whether that poor child at any breakfast, for morning or noon, has been given a bit of bread and butter, for lack of which he is unjustly boxed at school. And does she not plan her "shopping" and "calling" so that when the little ones come back from school or play, the house may not seem empty, because "mother" is out? No little nose in her house is flattened on the window pane, hour after hour, watching for the presence of the mother who fills the house with sunshine, while the children, as they also kiss them away, and say, "the tired little feet substitute soft slippers in lieu of the heavy boots. And who, at night, bathes the heated feet head and flushed face, and cooed off the little hands before they are folded to say, "Now I lay me," and leaves a kiss on lips that flutter with sleep at the last unsaid syllable? It may be that in this world it will never be fulfilled.

"Mother."

And now, perhaps, "mother" is that "gone," Oh how much is in that little word! There is a "mother" down stairs, but that will mean in two, three, or the grown people it leaves behind there may be solace, but, alas! for the little child, who cannot comprehend why when mother is "down stairs" she cannot at the same time be "gone,"—who knows not how from the narrow grave she can "get up" to the far heaven where they say she has flown! Alas!

for the little child, who is now overburdened with clothing, when it is warm and has a fat little nose and more hair needed; and goes hungry when food is impatient, and is overfed when digestion clamors for a respite; who breathes all night in already exhausted atmosphere, and sits perhaps in a deadly draught next morning! The little child who touches "mother's" work-box and "mother's" desk, but can never find her! who goes to sleep with a sigh in place of a smile, and wakes up to lonely house though filled with voices in all the wide world, and is never so empty a spot as that little heart-[Woman's Work, Atlanta, Ga.]

"What makes everyone love to be with you?" the sweet, simple, unaffected and very lovely Princess Alice once asked her grandmother, the Duchess of Kent. "I am always so sorry to have to leave you, and so are all others who come here. Don't you please tell me the reason?" The old lady smiled and said: "For a moment they were with me. The Duchess of Kent knew the secret of her influence over her friends, but how to explain it without vanity or egotism? In this most natural and truthful little girl at her side was not altogether an exact task. Alice's sweet directness could never be put off with a nook-room or disclaimer, as the dear old lady knew from an intimate acquaintance with her character." I think, my child, that this the heart, my deepest feeling is that I have been blessed to have known you. I hope that I can be a way to make people happy was to a person interested in the things which I fostered them—namely, their own desires—fairs—and this could only be accomplished by burying one's grief, and peace, satisfaction or joy completely out of sight. Forgetfulness of one's own concerns, my dear, a smiling face, a word of sympathy and unselfish help where it is possible to give it, will always make one happy, and will give the heart of one who has been so deep-rooted in the heart and mind of beautiful goodness, and her brief but exceptional life proves the wonderful power of unselfish regard for others. We could a better lesson for all our girls found than this one, given so me-years ago by the aged duchess? Of people's affairs? Why, our own affairs are of infinitely more importance to and yet, if we take the trouble to think about us, we are sure to find that most successful and helpful persons those who lend a ready ear to the views of others and keep a close note concerning their own.—Youth's Companion.

A Mother's Vacation.

A pretty talented girl, who has completed her school course with credit, and by reason of her special talent has received more attention and adulation than falls to the lot of most girls was asked the other day how she loving it very much," she answered brightly. "I'm doing the housework normally, and feeling motherly have a little. You tell me, what is the vacation, then?" was the natural question. "Oh, no, she's at home; but giving her a chance to rest in the morning, and to dress up and sit out on piazza when she feels like it. I think it will do her good to have a little change." The good mother! She worked hard, dressed plainly, strove faithfully to give her children a start in life, a better chance than she had in her own young days, and was not a bit less satisfied with her

THE MANDARIN.

While seated in his palanquin, A finer sight I have not seen!"

Rode Ling Guan Foo, a mandarin, "We washed those garments," answered he,

Some laundry people working high, "With soap that's made beyond the sea,

Were hanging garments out to dry, The Ivory Soap they call it there,

He beckoned with his golden fan, We find it good beyond compare,

And thus addressed the nearest man: Then said the mandarin profound:

"Why do the robes upon your line "Go, order me a thousand pound,

Like glaciers of Alaska shine? And they who use another kind,

Since we set out from Ning Po Keen, Shall prison cell and scaffold find!"

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the Ivory," they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.
